Scriptural Reflections

Elijah was sent by God to steer King Ahab and his kingdom back toward the faith they had abandoned for other gods. Elijah's first assignment was to inform Ahab that the Lord alone was the source of life in Israel. Until the king recognized this truth, there would be no rain in his kingdom.

The narrative includes no explicit response from the king. But total rejection can be implied from the fact that Elijah had to move to safety across the border of the kingdom. For a long time, God cared for him until even the streams ran dry. This reading begins with Elijah's arrival in Zarephath, where God said he would be cared for by a widow. It should be noted that Zarephath was in the kingdom of Tyre, homeland to Ahab's consort, Jezebel. She worshipped the Canaanite storm-god, Baal. But even in her homeland, there was no rain.

Elijah encounters the widow immediately, and she is ready to provide the cup of water he requests. But when he also asks for bread, she says she has none—and that, in fact, there is so little flour and oil in her home that she believes she and her son will not survive another day. God wanted to give Elijah the opportunity to display his power as an agent of life.

Elijah tells the widow to put fear aside. She can make the bread he requests because, by God's word, the flour and the oil will not be depleted during the entire duration of the drought. Trusting in God's word spoken by Elijah, the widow goes on her way and prepares the bread. Her faith is rewarded. She and her son have plenty to eat all through the year of drought.

At this point in Mk, Jesus has condemned the whole temple system by his symbolic action of turning over the tables of the sellers and money changers. Ultimately, this will be the action that will lead to his death by crucifixion. In spite of all that, he continues teaching, and no one attempts to stop him.

He points out the scribes, the scholars of the law, as leaders who should not be followed. They love public show and recognition. They gravitate to places of honor, and they are skilled in producing lengthy prayers. However, underneath all this is nothing but empty phoniness. They exploit the poor and the needy, and they do it in the name of religion. Jesus declares that they will be in for very severe condemnation. As scribes, they should know better, and they should act better. Their phoniness cheapens religion and turns religious leadership into nothing more than a fiasco. These accusations need not be limited to the scribes. The evangelist wants Christian leaders to take a good look at themselves.
